

Both pieces express the idea of community throughout their entire performances. The differences in each routine are shown in the choreography and how the dancers exemplify this idea of community. In one routine, the dancers use three groups that execute different elements such as pirouettes, battements, levels and transitions. These groups show that uniqueness and individuality can be used to create one big beautiful picture. In the other routine, the dancers divide themselves in two lines. These lines use different levels and choreography, but in the end use each other to help one another up. The variety of choreography shows that each group was able to incorporate their own strengths while creating a connected piece to share the artistic intent with the audience.
