Sub theme: Gender inequality

- This is one of the feminism issues that strikes me the most. When someone says, "like a girl" or "those are girly things" (push up). I really just get furious. Is like a girl bad? Is it different? Did it not meet your expectations? And that's the thing. People expect things. I don't want to live up to people's expectations. So people expect, since you're a girl, you're limited to what seems right.

Example: Sports is not a girl thing. And when that tells me is they think we can't handle it. They think we're too weak. Well we can do the same damn thing that boys can do. Does it matter whether it's on our chest or between our legs? Why does that have to make us so unequal? I just wish we could be equal. But that's not how life is. And it won't ever be.
